JOHNSON COUNTY, Mo. -- The two bridges on Route DD, just west of Knob Noster will open by the end of today. Whiteman Air Force Base members coming from Warrensburg can now resume their daily commute. Missouri Department of Transportation finished and replaced the two bridges under the Safe & Sound bridge improvement program.

Short-tour credit changes

By Erin Tindell

Air Force Personnel, Services and Manpower Public Affairs

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas (AFNS) -- Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Norton

Schwartz approved rescinding a temporary policy established in 2003 that allowed Airmen to receive short-tour credit for overseas TDYs of at least 181 consecutive days. The effective date of the new policy will be announced at a later date

Although the policy change primarily affects Airmen who deploy to a hostile fire or imminent danger pay area, it also affects a small number of Airmen serving TDY in certain remote areas.

Officials announced in September a change in the air and space expeditionary force rotational baseline from 120 to 179 days for most active component Airmen in various career fields. Longer AEF tours have become the norm, and that is part of the reason for the policy change.

Former Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. John Jumper in June 2003 approved a temporary exception to policy that awarded short-tour credit to Airmen who deployed to hostile environments for at least 181 consecutive days after Sept. 11, 2001. A similar exception was made for Airmen deploying in support of Desert Storm in the early 1990s.

U.S. Air Force Graphic

Officials decided to eliminate the temporary exception to short-tour credit policy in fairness to those deploying for longer periods of time. Additionally, transportation delays and mandatory overlap time with successors often cause Airmen deployed for 179 days to remain in the area of responsibility long enough to trigger the 181-day threshold.

"With Airmen deploying for longer periods of time, particularly for 365 days, it is no longer equitable to grant short-tour credit based on a 181-day minimum," said Col. David Slade, director of assignments at the Air Force Personnel Center. "Additionally, service in hostile environments and longer periods of family separation are inevitable since the standard deployment is now 179 days."

Under the new policy, the following guidelines apply and will be effective the date the guidance memorandum is signed at Headquarters Air Force Manpower, Personnel and Services. Airmen previously awarded short-tour credit under the temporary 181-day policy will keep their short-tour credit - Airmen who arrive in the area of responsibility TDY prior to guidance implementation and serve at least 181 days consecutively in a hostile fire or imminent danger pay area will receive short-tour credit under the previous criteria

- Airmen who arrive in the AOR TDY on or after the date of guidance implementation will only receive short-tour credit based on TDY service stipulated in AFI 36-2110, Assignments:

-- 300-plus days overseas in a consecutive 18 month period

-- 548-plus days overseas in a consecutive 3 year period

Since the exception to policy went into effect in 2003, 16,795 Airmen have deployed more than once on 179-day taskings. More than 52,000 Airmen have deployed for 181 to 200 days since Sept. 11, 2001. The number of 179-day taskings also has grown significantly since January 2006, from about 6,500 taskings to about 16,600 taskings.

For more information, go to the Air Force personnel services website at https://gum-crm. csd.disa.mil, or call the Total Force Service Center at 800-525-0102 or DSN 665-5000.

2 The Warrior April 29, 2011 Commentary Instructing with an 'IDEA'

Lt. Col. David Benson

325th Weapons Squadron Commander

The #1 job of a leader is to build more leaders.

As an Airman you are, by default, a leader. It comes with the uniform. It is recited in our Creed. A critical ability of any leader is the ability to instruct, to teach. So, how do you do this? Do you have any techniques? If you don't, here is a very simple, yet very effective tool to help you in teaching others. It is called IDEA (Instruct, Demonstrate, Experience and Assess).

Instruct - The first step is fairly straight forward. In order to teach someone you must first instruct them on what you would like them to do. Although this seems very obvious, this step is often forgotten. Have you ever told someone to "sign in from leave" or "make sure you have met all your deployment requirements" without first telling them how to do these things. They may seem simple to you because you have done them before. But to someone who hasn't they may not even know where to start. Therefore, you must always ask if the person knows how to do your request and provide any required instruction prior to having any expectation of them completing the task. But sometimes, this is not enough and the person does not do the task as you require. This is where you move on to demonstrate.

Demonstrate - Have you ever read directions to something that you could not fully understand? Did you try to put it together anyway and end up making things worse? This is where demonstration comes in. You may think you provided very clear instruction, but communication is a two way street. The receiver must understand and be able to replicate your directions. Sometimes words are not enough and you must be able to demonstrate the behavior you wish them to replicate. This may require you to start them in the right direction or even show them the entire task (maybe multiple times). Whatever it takes, it is your responsibility to demonstrate the action to the level required for understanding and replication.

them before. But to someone who hasn't they may not even know where to start. Therefore, you must always ask if the the may not even know where to start.

with the opportunity to practice and gain experience (if required). Often this will need to be supervised to ensure proper techniques and procedures, but the actual performance of the activity should be the responsibility of the student. As a teacher, you should watch and provide instruction only when required. All too often we are too quick to interject and do not allow the student a chance to experience any lessons on their own. Once they have some experience, it is time to for the last step in the process, assess.

Supervise - Although many might look at assess and think evaluate, this is wrong (although sometimes the tone of the instruction may make you believe it was an evaluation). Assessing is looking at the actions of the student and then providing instruction as needed. This, in turn, starts the IDEA process again and can be repeated as many times as required to ensure understanding.

So the next time you need to provide instruction and are looking for a simple tool to help, maybe you can use the IDEA approach to help guide your techniques as you continue to develop our future leaders. Good luck!

The day autism was made into a fool

By Master Sgt. Scott T. Sturkol Air Mobility Command Public Affairs

SCOTT AIR FORCE BASE, Ill. (AFNS) -- It was April 1, also known as "April Fool's Day," and I saw a 14-year-old boy make autism into a fool.

The 14-year-old is my son Jackson. On April 1 he was competing in the Chicago area as an Illinois state finalist for the National Geography Bee, representing his school district.

But before I tell you how he did, let me tell you more about how we got to this point.

Back in September 1996, Jackson was the last child born to our family. At the time, neither my wife nor I had ever thought about autism, much less knew anyone who had lived with it. Over the course of the next 18 months, after he was born, we started to see signs of something different.

At Jackson's 18-month "well baby" check at the base hospital at Mountain Home Air Force Base, Idaho, his pediatrician told us his development process was behind considerably. Hearing it from the doctor wasn't a surprise to us since we noticed his abilities were much different than his older siblings' were at the same age.

So what did this all mean? We didn't know. But, thanks to the pediatrician, we were recommended to have further tests completed through the state and other sources. I can say it was learning experience for all of us as we went through the process.

For the first few years, Jackson was diagnosed as having "development delay" with "some autistic behaviors."

Whatever they called it, my wife and I didn't care -- we just knew we had to work hard as a family to keep Jackson advancing in everything. Everything new Jackson had to learn was a challenge for him, but he pressed forward and made many leaps and bounds.

When Jackson learned to walk, he was nearly 3-years-old. We were on a camping trip to the Idaho mountains and for some reason he just finally decided to get up and go. When he was 4-years-old, we got our first family computer, and within a short time, he had taught himself most of the alphabet, how to type and partially how to read. It was an amazing leap in learning ability.

By the time Jackson was 6-years-old, he could not only read, but I'd also have him load software on the computer.

On the technical side with computers, Jackson's ability was far more advanced than even some adults. On the social and sensory perception side though, Jackson was behind other children his age. He had difficulty writing with a pencil, and his desire to be around crowds of other people just wasn't there.

But as a family, we pressed on and so did Jackson. When he was about 9-years-old, the way the world viewed the autism spectrum changed, and Jackson's diagnosis changed as well. He was now said to have autism, but was "high functioning." For us, leading up to that time, we already knew he had autism.

Yet again, no matter what the medical community was calling Jackson's condition, we just kept our nose to the grindstone as a family, doing whatever we had to do to keep our son on the road to progress. And truly, he has progressed.

Now, at just over 14 years of age, Jackson has made leaps and bounds in many ways.

I credit his mother, first, for being his "biggest fan." There is no other person in our family who has made more of a monumental effort than her to bring him to a point where when he enters ninth grade, he'll be doing the work like any other child his age.

Now, to get back to April 1 in Chicago. Jackson became a state finalist for the National Geographic Society's National Geography Bee after winning the competition at his school, and then taking a test based on geography that served as a "regional" competition which created 100 finalists for the state of Illinois.

In Illinois, for 2011, there were 532 school winners from around the state. Jackson's test results put him in the top 100, and according to school officials, he's only the second student in his school district to advance this far in the last decade. That is an amazing achievement, considering the thousands of students who have gone through his school in those 10 years.

At the competition, Jackson had an impressive performance, but he wasn't the overall winner. He correctly answered seven of eight questions and finished 14th in the state. Not bad for a kid who has persevered over much tougher things, such as simply learning to ride a bike.

So on April 1, I sat there and saw my son, in front of dozens of people, stand up and compete with the confidence of a motivational speaker. I sat and thought how ironic the journey had been to that day. I thought of all the things we'd been through with him and how he's been a conquering hero through it all.

"It's April Fool's Day," I thought, watching Jackson get yet another answer right. "But who is the fool now?"

Though April is Autism Awareness Month, I can tell you that every month for our family is Autism Awareness Month. When you think of autism, think of children like Jackson and families like ours who know the everyday challenges the condition can bring. We are stronger because of it and we continue to do the best we can.

On April 1 a great thing happened. I saw a boy with autism beat down the doors that supposedly stay shut for children like him. It's the day I saw autism made into a fool.

Continuing to strengthen nuclear operations: Munitions Squadrons to realign

By Vicki Stein

Secretary of the Air Force Public Affairs

WASHINGTON (AFNS) -- Air Force officials announced April 27 plans to transfer munitions squadrons responsible for nuclear mission support from Air Force Materiel Command to Air Force Global Strike Command in the next 12 months.

This is another step in continuing to strengthen the nuclear enterprise; under a previous move, these munitions squadrons were consolidated under AFMC's Air Force Nuclear Weapons Center.

With Air Force Global Strike Command now fully mission-capable, the time is right for a final realignment under the command that also has responsibility for daily nuclear deterrence operations, Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Norton Schwartz said.

"The munitions squadrons were placed under Air Force Materiel Command at the outset of our effort to reinvigorate the nuclear enterprise," General Schwartz said. "AFMC and its leaders have done an outstanding job restoring excellence in munitions operations, and they, along with the Air Force Nuclear Weapons Center, will remain a key part of the nuclear munitions sustainment and integration process."

The re-alignment will allow for enhanced unity of command under a single major command responsible for most of the nuclear operational mission, he said.

"Most important, by doing this we are continuing to strengthen the nuclear enterprise while seeking constant improvement and doing things the best way possible for safe, secure and effective operations," General Schwartz said.

Squadrons will re-align in (U.S. Air Force graphic by Corey Parrish) place as well as ike Com- remain about the same size organizational-e ly, so disruptions to operations and people at the units will be minimal.

"Almost two years after being established, Air Force Global Strike Command is now a mature organization capable of integrating the munitions function into the larger nuclear mission," General Schwartz said.

Affected organizations are: 798th Munitions Maintenance Group at Minot Air Force Base, N.D.; 498th Munitions Maintenance Group at Whiteman AFB, See Munitions, Page 7

Surviving the unexpected

Bv Heidi Hunt

509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

Unexpected disruptions like accidents, illness or government shutdowns can cause hardships for those who are not prepared.

Earlier this month, military families and Federal Department of Defense employees were sent scrambling when their pay was threatened by the lack of a budget agreement. Fortunately Congress was able resolve its differences and passed a budget for the remainder of the year, ensuring federal employees received their full pay.

But while military members and their families were waiting for a resolution, the Airman and Family Readiness Center was already receiving phone calls.

"People wanted to know where they would make up that extra money," said R.D. "Smitty" Smith, 509th Force Support Squadron readiness consultant. "We told them there were a few things they needed to do to be proactive.

"The first thing we told them was to call their creditors," he said. "Actually talk to someone and tell them about your situation."

The more you talk to them, the more they are willing to work with you; rather than being late and not making a payment and hurting your credit score, according to Smitty.

Your Standards For Excellence Dealer

"Inform them that there will be a loss of income for a period of time and ask them what options are available," he said.

According to Smitty, people can arrange for their situation in advance by doing the following:

Ask creditors to be receptive – "Explain to them that you are going to be late on a payment and request they work out a plan that will not negatively affect your credit report," he said.

□ Ask if the creditor will forgo a month's payment and charge only the interest on your bills instead of making the full payment. "Pay the interest, but don't pay the full principle on the loan," Smitty said

• Or, tie in the payment to the end of a loan and forgo that month's payment altogether.

□ Simply ask your creditors what options are available and make an arrangement.

"This way you are armed with knowledge about what to expect," Smitty said. "By communicating what your options are, you can be involved in a plan to be proactive with your creditors."

For questions about financial assistance or to schedule a consultation about your credit situation, contact Smitty at the A&FRC at (660) 687-7123.

If he was standing under a rain cloud, he would start dancing in the rain. He would turn a case of the Mondays into a case of the Fridays (if such a thing exists.) And keeping this mentality, Tech. Sgt. Shannon Fisher said he found the pleasant side of being deployed to Bagram, Afghanistan.

Sergeant Fisher, 509th Medical Support Squadron flight personnel and administration flight chief, left here Dec. 18, 2009 for his six-month deployment.

While deployed, Sergeant Fish was the 455th Expeditionary Medical Group NCO in charge of J-1, or the medical personnel section.

"Primarily, my responsibilities were to track in-bound and out-bound personnel and take care of personnel tasks such as decorations," Sergeant Fisher said. "I was also the unit travel representative, so I was responsible for everyone that was leaving the AoR out of my unit."

Sergeant Fisher said his deployed duties were similar to his work here, "The only difference: the deployed work was more about readiness coordination in assuring people got home," he added. "We made sure everyone had their travel itineraries and orders before they left."

Last deployed to Al-Salem, Kuwait circa 2000, the sergeant said he enjoyed his first deployment in more than a decade, which gave him the opportunity to work alongside

"We had an opportunity to interact and work with the Army and Navy, which was a rewarding experience," he said. "I believe experiencing how the other branches see and do things different from us was great. It gave us a chance to share knowledge between sister services."

Although, his job came first and foremost, Sergeant Fisher found time for his spiritual side.

"We had a chapel with a gospel service called enduring faith chapel," he said. "I attended the church at least every Sunday and eventually became the administer of music and played the key board."

The chapel, which had an attendance of more than 170 when Sergeant Fisher arrived, quickly grew to more than 400 by the time he left, according to the sergeant.

"It gave you a sense of home and the fellowship was good for the spiritual side you need," Sergeant Fisher said. "It helped with the stress of being in a deployed environment. It was an opportunity to escape the thought of being in Afghanistan."

A dedicated worker and volunteer at the chapel, Sergeant Fisher also committed time to finishing his Bachelor's degree in Health Care Management.

"I think everyone should have an opportunity to deploy and have a chance to put the practice they do at home-base everyday into real-world action," Sergeant Fish said. "It really gives you a great appreciation for your job.'

"Fish" returned July 6, 2010 with his eyes squinted and teeth showing ... his trademark expression.

down here is seamless," Sergeant Hensley said. "We all have the same goals and mission. We treat each other by what's on our sleeve not by our squadron." The fuels systems shop's mission is to ensure the B-2 is ready to fly by repairing, cleaning and inspecting the eight fuel tanks on the aircraft for foreign objects, corrosion, cell deterioration and St. Louis National Airport, Mo., to support the fungus. If they fail to perform their mission in any way, the $2 billion aircraft wouldn't be able to fly, Sergeant Hensley said.

Working to perform this mission are 18 activeduty Airmen and eight guard members, three of whom are full-time. The 26 Airmen work in a threeshift rotation 24/7.

"We sometimes have manning challenges just like other shops," said Tech. Sergeant Mark Kolat, 509th Maintenance Squadron fuels system technion the B-2 Spirit fuel tanks and cells, said Master cian. "But it's always nice to have the Guard there

The Whiteman Officers' Spouses' Club is holding their last social before the summer May 12 at Montserrat Vineyards, 6:30 p.m. and invites all Whiteman Air Force Base officers' spouses' to join.

"It is a chance to meet other spouses, eat good food and have lots of fun," said Chris Templin, OSC member and publicity coordinator. "You will be able to sign up and join next year's group, and if you do, you might just win a wonderful gift."

Current OSC members can also renew their membership.

The Whiteman OSC is a nonprofit organization whose mission is to organize and sponsor educational, charitable and social activities. The goal is to provide information of interest to the members and to foster the ideals of charity and fellowship.

The group meets once a month for socials and members have the opportunity to join clubs within the OSC for those who have personal interests.

News

"Members can join the gourmet club, wine club and arts & crafts club; to name a few," she said. "You can even spearhead your own club." Anastasia Radloff, OSC member, organized her own club, the OSC paper craft club and said she enjoys sharing her unique > stamping and scrapbooking creativity with others.

"Sharing my passion gives me an opportunity to do what I love while having a good time with other military spouses," Mrs. Radloff said.

Mrs. Templin encourages all Team Whiteman Officers' Spouses' to come out and join and see what we're all about.

"We hope to see you there!" Mrs. Templin concluded.

Show seeks military families for extreme home makeover

By Elaine Sanchez

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON (AFNS) -- The producers of ABC's "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition" are seeking people involved in the military whose home deserves an extreme makeover.

The producers are looking for people with "amazing strength of character and who put their own needs aside to help others," a press release said. "Whether it's a Soldier, a mom, a teacher or a fireman, we think deserving families are families who inspire those around them."

Additionally, the show's producers are seeking families whose houses need major alterations or repair - "homes that present serious problems for the family and affect the family's quality of life."

To be eligible, families must own their single family home and be able to demonstrate how a makeover will make a difference in their lives.

Interested military families or people who wish to nominate a military family should e-mail a short description of the family's story to emheusa@emhe.tv. The e-mail should include the names and ages of household members, a description of the family's challenges, an explanation of why the family is deserving of a makeover or is a positive role model in the community, photos of the family and their home, and contact numbers.

The deadline for nominations is May 30, but people should send submissions early, the release said. Only up to 25 families are selected each season.

For more information on the application process, visit http://abc.go.com/primetime/ xtremehome/index?pn=apply.

Pass this information on to deserving military families. I hope to see a few on "Home Edition" next season.

This Week at the Movies

Battle: Los Angeles

Saturday, 7 p.m.

Aaron Eckhart, Michelle Rodriguez — For years, there have been documented cases of UFO sightings around the world -- Buenos Aires, Seoul, France, Germany, China. But in 2011, what were once just sightings will become a terrifying reality when Earth is attacked by unknown forces. As people everywhere watch the world's great cities fall, Los Angeles becomes the last stand for mankind in a battle no one expected. It's up to a Marine staff sergeant and his new platoon to draw a line in the sand as they take on an enemy unlike any they've ever encountered before. PG-13 sustained and intense sequences of war violence and destruction, and for language. 116 minutes

Paul

Sunday, 3 p.m.

Seth Rogen, Jean Lynch — For the past 60 years, an alien named Paul has been hanging out at a top-secret military base. For reasons unknown, the space-traveling alien decides to escape the compound hopping on the first vehicle out of town -- a RV containing Earthlings Graeme Willy and Clive Gollings. Chased by federal agents and the fanatical father of a young woman that they accidentally kidnap, Graeme and Clive hatch a fumbling escape plan to return Paul to his mother ship. And as two nerds struggle to help, one little green man might just take his fellow outcasts from misfits to intergalactic heroes. Rated R for language including sexual references, and some drug use. 104 minutes Movie showings are featured at the Whiteman AFB Movie Theater. For more information call (660) 687-5110.
