Happy Thanksgiving!!!

Team Whiteman

Barb and I want to wish all members of Team Whiteman a happy Thanksgiving.

As you prepare meals, spend time with friends and family and take some highly-earned downtime, please keep in mind those who are not with us, the ones on the front lines this weekend protecting our ability to keep this day truly thankful. Think of our deployed members and their families. I also ask you to reach out to those who are here without someone to share this weekend with. A simple phone call to a lone Team Whiteman member can make all the difference. Have a great weekend!

Niner!

Air Force specialties affected by retraining reduction

By Debbie Gildea

Air Force Personnel Center Public Affairs

JOINT BASE SAN ANTONIO-RANDOLPH, Texas (AFNS) -- As many as 1,000 Airmen may be affected by a recently identified decrease in fiscal 2014 retraining objectives, with 35 or more Air Force specialty codes removed from the retraining-in list, Air Force officials said Nov. 26.

Retraining is used to shape and balance the force by offering Airmen in overmanned specialties opportunities to retrain into undermanned fields. Retraining officials develop tentative projections in the spring for the coming fiscal year, adjusting the real-time retraining advisory as changes occur.

"When we develop the retraining advisory, we look at historical and trending changes in AFSCs and project how many Airmen we are likely to need in each AFSC and grade for the coming year," said Brig. Gen. Gina Grosso, the Air Force director of force management policy. "Those projections are always tentative because unanticipated changes occur throughout the year. This year, we are decreasing retraining opportunities because of ongoing budget uncertainty."

Retraining classes scheduled for Jan. 1 or later will be cancelled, and affected Airmen will be notified, said Joe Crady, the Air Force retraining chief.

"We don't plan to cancel classes for Airmen who are already enroute or within 45 days of their class start date, since that would be very disruptive for them and could create a hardship. However, we are contacting those whose classes start in January or later to ensure that we can prevent them from making plans and commitments tied to their retraining," Crady explained.

Fields removed from the retraining advisory, based on new projections, are already showing as overmanned. Allowing Airmen to retrain into those fields now would exacerbate the problem, he explained.

First term Airmen approved for retraining whose classes will be cancelled are entitled to a career job reservation in their current field, according to Air Force Personnel Center

"Once notified of the cancellation, first term Airmen should contact their local military personnel section for reenlistment eligibility," said Michael McLaughlin, the AFPC reenlistments chief.

"We still have open fields for retraining, but they are limited and acceptance is very competitive, so Airmen who want to pursue that avenue should act now," Crady added.

For first term and career Airmen who are still interested in retraining, there are some options, which are listed on the retraining advisory in myPers.

"We value every Airman's contributions to the mission and the selfless sacrifices they make to ensure that our nation is secure and strong," Grosso said. "I encourage Airmen to stay informed on personnel policy changes so they can continue to make informed decisions about their careers."

Commander's Safety Intent

1. Every member of Air Force Global Strike Command plays a vital role. Serious injuries and fatalities erode our ability to complete the mission. The true cost of these mishaps cannot be measured by statistics. It is felt, however, by the loss of a valuable team member that can't be replaced. Our command simply cannot afford the cost of a preventable mishap.

2. Private motor vehicle mishaps continue to be the leading cause of Air Force fatalities. Driving while fatigued or impaired, too fast for conditions, not wearing a seat belt, and operating a motorcycle recklessly are the most common factors. Texting and cellular phone use while driving continues to cause vehicle mishaps by taking your attention away from the road. Preventing these mishaps is as simple as making responsible choices: pay attention to the road, wear your seatbelt, slow down; and get plenty of rest.

3. Whether you are at home or at work, allow yourself a margin of safety. Regardless of the activity, always use the correct personal protective equipment. If you believe it would be safer to accomplish an activity at a different time or in a different work environment, inform your supervisor. Managing the environment is an essential part of minimizing risk.

4. Every Airman has the responsibility to prevent needless loss. By applying sound risk management principles, exercising good judgment, and being a good Wingman, we can accomplish our assigned mission safely. I expect you to embrace our command value of "safety in all things large and small," and apply it in your personal and professional lives.

Air Force releases sexual assault convictions

By Air Force Global Strike Command Public Affairs

BARKSDALE AIR FORCE BASE, La. -- The Air Force has made available online a listing of the service's sexual assault convictions with offenders' names, to further emphasize that this criminal conduct is not tolerated.

Anyone can view the site, which contains more than 100 sexual assault convictions from across the Air Force listed by base.

This is a significant deterrent to potential offenders and lets Airmen know that our commanders take this crime seriously, according to Col. Ronald Ratton, Air Force Global Strike Command staff judge advocate.

Some of the cases involve Airmen assaulting fellow Airmen. Many times these victims were co-workers - people who trusted their assailant. These offenders violated that trust and were punished accordingly.

"This is the latest initiative undertaken by the Air Force to aggressively combat the problem of sexual assaults - further underscoring there is absolutely no tolerance for this crime in our ranks," said Vicki Shepherd, AFGSC Sexual Assault Prevention Response coordinator.

As required by many state laws, convicted Airmen must also register in their jurisdiction's sexual assault registry. These sex offender lists include the names and addresses of convicted sex offenders and are publicly available online.

Airmen convicted of sexual assault will be held accountable by military judges and court-martial panels. Punishments often include jail time, rank reductions and punitive discharges. Airmen are encouraged to visit the website and review the facts of each case, then educate and warn fellow Airmen about the consequences of committing these crimes.

"If someone observes something unfolding they should be a good Wingman and safely intervene," Shepherd said. "A few words of intervention can be the best remedy and prevention."

There are a number of prevention resources available to include awareness training, education, victim advocacy, response, reporting and accountability: www.afpc.af.mil/library/sapr/index.asp. # Leadership Pathways: Rewards for developing skills

Staff Sgt. Brigitte N. Brantley
509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

Resiliency – it's one of the biggest buzz words in the Air Force.

But to leadership at Whiteman, it is more than just a word; it is a concept they are intent on strengthening through the 40 classes of the Leadership Pathways program.

This program, which began at Dover Air Force Base, Del., in 2011, has spread to bases Air Force-wide.

All the classes are designed to help every Airman -- active-duty, Reserve, Guard and civilian -- as well as their spouses, build resiliency in four ways: physically, mentally, socially and spiritually.

The Air Force has begun to more seriously address the issue of resiliency, and one of its major emphases has been to change the perception surrounding resiliency training in general. By changing the focus from negative to positive, classes are de-stigmatized and people can attend them openly without others thinking they have a problem.

"The classes are designed to develop better leaders at all levels," said Brian Kirby, interim community support coordinator. "Even if you attend training just to work on your leadership skills, what you learn will spill over into your life, as well."

Kirby used the tobacco cessation mentorship class as an example – just because a participant might not use tobacco products, chances are they one day will have the opportunity to put the class' lessons to use in helping a family member or fellow Airman quit.

While attending the classes, attendees are also developing the skills that help them advise, supervise, mentor or teach. In return for their investment of time and energy, they are rewarded with various incentives.

If a military member attends eight classes, he earns a certificate. Attending 15 classes earns him a one-day pass and 20 classes earns him a three-day pass. Spouses are awarded with a certificate, $25 commissary coupon and $50 commissary coupon, respectively, for attending the same number of classes.

"People might be put off by the 'leadership' in the name of the program, but we want Airmen of all ranks to participate," said Tech. Sgt. Katherine Humpal, Whiteman's community support coordinator. "A lot of times, Airmen will go to each other before they approach their supervisors with a problem, so it's important they learn these skills, as well."

The classes offer training in many areas that will improve basic resilience and life skills, including healthy family relations, relationship-building skills, child and teen rearing, finances, conflict management and goal setting.

The classes are offered by the following Whiteman agencies:

- Family Advocacy Program, 660-687-4342
- Airman and Family Readiness Center, 660-687-7132
- Health and Wellness Center, 660-687-7662
- Whiteman AFB Chapel, 660-687-3652
- Mental Health, 660-687-4341
- Sexual Assault Prevention and Response, 660-687-7272
- Legal Office, 660-687-6809
- Career Advisor, 660-687-7829

To see a complete list of classes and what agency to contact to sign up for them, visit www.whiteman.af.mil/library/resilience/index.asp. Make sure to visit this site again in early December for an updated list of classes.

Whiteman Theater celebrates grand re-opening

509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

The newly-renovated Whiteman Theater was unveiled to the base populace during a grand re-opening ceremony Wednesday. Featuring a brand-new projector, digital screen and concession area, the 240-seat theater underwent two months of renovations estimated at $200,000 and is now also capable of showing 3-D movies.

"It's a nice family atmosphere where you can come see movies for a reasonable price," said Sara Benson, Army and Air Force Exchange Service theater supervisor. "Whether for families who live on base or Airmen who live in the dorms and don't have much going on, it's a great place to check out."

Benson added the updated concession area features a new popcorn maker, pizza, pretzels, nachos and 15 varieties of candy.

"Having a theater on base is great because it's closer than Warrensburg," said Staff Sgt. Jessica Teeters from the 509th Logistics Readiness Squadron. "I brought my daughter Rhapsody and son Cole, who are 8 and 4, to the grand re-opening because they really, really wanted to see the movie."

Another guest in the crowd was even more excited to have the convenience of a theater on base.

"It's just easier because it's so near, especially if it's a group of us going," said Sydney Rubio, the 11-year-old stepdaughter of Staff Sgt. Jason Cherry from the 509th Communications Squadron. "Now if my friends and I want to go see a movie, it's convenient that we can walk."

Movie-goers can find out what is playing by visiting www.shopmyexchange.com/ReelTimeTheatres/Movies-WhitemanAFB.htm or by calling 660-687-5110.

A mission to provide aid and therapy

U.S. Air Force Senior Airman India Meserve, 509th Medical Operations Squadron physical therapy technician, shares a laugh with U.S. Air Force Tech. Sgt. Thomas Dawson, 509th Civil Engineer Squadron, during a physical therapy exercise session at Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo., Nov. 8. Air Force physical therapy technicians perform a variety of duties, including the evaluation and treatment of patients, therapeutic training and serving as consultants to medical staff members.

U.S. Air Force Senior Airman India Meserve, 509th Medical Operations Squadron physical therapy technician, examines patient records. Physical therapy technicians are subject matter experts who treat patients on a variety of injuries and help rehabilitate them until they are fully recovered and mission-ready.

By Staff Sgt. Nick Wilson
509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

Every Airman has a unique story on why they joined the Air Force.

For Senior Airman India Meserve, a physical therapy technician with the 509th Medical Operations Squadron, joining the Air Force offers her opportunities to broaden her horizons.

As a physical therapy technician, her job is to help provide evidence-based care to reduce pain and restore function following musculoskeletal injuries or orthopedic surgery for Whiteman's active-duty population.

"I like being able to see patients grow and see them help themselves," Meserve said. "You can have a patient that you've seen two years ago who will come in just to say 'hi.' And he still does the exercises and is thankful we helped him. When you see that you've helped a patient and they still do exercises you've taught them so long ago, it's a good feeling."

For Meserve, seeing all of the different types of injuries and being able to work on new and different treatment plans is one of the most rewarding aspects of her job. In fact, Meserve said she enjoys working in the physical therapy field so much that she would like to continue work in that field after her time in the Air Force expires.

"I love sports, so I've always been interested in athletes and athletic activities," Meserve said. "I've always wanted to either be an athlete or work with them. Physical therapy was a great opportunity for me to carry that dream out."

Another reason for pursuing a career in physical therapy was the joy Meserve finds in helping people.

"You're working with people a couple of times a week and you get to build rapport with them and see them get better," Meserve said.

This part of the job differs from that of technicians in many other medical fields, who get to help patients, but do not get an opportunity to see their progress, Meserve said.

Meserve is currently pursuing a bachelor's degree in exercise science in an effort to follow her dream of working in the physical therapy career field. She is nearly halfway finished with her degree.

"I'm almost at the equivalent of a junior," Meserve said. "It feels great, but when I look at my friends from high school, most of them are either graduated from college or they're seniors. But then I think about how I've also had a full-time job for more than four years while they're still in college."

In addition to pursuing a bachelor's degree, Meserve is almost done with her Community College of the Air Force degree. She only has one class left before she will be completely finished.

"I'd say the biggest reason why I joined the Air Force was for education," Meserve said. "It's a pretty good incentive."

To keep her mind clear, Meserve also spends a great deal of her off-duty time working out in the gym.

"The gym is really helpful because if I'm stressed then I can put all of that energy into working out, which allows me to clear my head," Meserve said. "I also work out to stay healthy and fit."

In addition to working out and pursuing her education, Meserve also spends a lot of time doing volunteer work. She is currently the booster club president for the 509th Medical Group.

"I like to keep my mind busy," Meserve said. "It's better to go out and volunteer than to just sit at home because you're actively engaged if you're helping your community or the people around you."

"Meserve always goes above and beyond in all that she does," said Tech. Sgt. Lizmarie Linares, 509th MDOS NCO in charge of physical therapy. "She is pretty much the heart and soul of this clinic. She is a great person with a great personality."

Whether she is helping a patient during a physical therapy session, working on college course work or on the grindstone in the gym, Meserve is always driving and pushing herself until she feels a sense of accomplishment.

"If you're just kind of gliding through life or you're on coast the whole time, you're not really doing anything because you're just kind of moving," Meserve said. "However, if you actively engage in your life and you push back when life pushes you, it makes you feel more fulfilled."

Whiteman participates in Great American Smokeout

By Senior Airman Lacie Carmody
509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

The Professional Development Center hosted an afternoon highlighting The Great American Smokeout Nov. 21, 2013. This event has occurred nationwide every third Thursday in November for the past 38 years.

The day is as an opportunity for current smokers to pledge not to smoke for a full day while making plans to quit. They are offered guidance on effective methods and techniques from both health professionals and former smokers, which can help them, kick the habit for good. The Great American Smokeout also serves as a platform to publicize the health hazards of smoking in an effort to deter teenagers who could become potential smokers.

Brian Kirby, Health Promotion Director for Whiteman's Health and Wellness Center, said individuals who quit are helping not only themselves but the Department of Defense as well.

"Not only is tobacco use the number one cause of premature death in Americans today, with more than 440,000 killed last year alone, it costs the DOD $1.6 billion annually in combined direct health care costs, and costs associated with loss of productivity, absence from work, lowered resilience, and more," Kirby said. "Collaborating with the American Cancer Society in celebrating their annual 'Smokeout' day allows us to focus some attention on the potential for improved health and performance of Team Whiteman if we further reduce the use of tobacco within our community."

Though progress is slow, Kirby says he is pleased to see positive trends in Airmen living tobacco-free. However, despite success with cigarettes, smokeless tobacco is on the rise and the HAWC is ready to work to improve health in this area as well.

"The Great American Smokeout is a great day of awareness to challenge people to take that first step and give up their tobacco products for that day, and then hopefully continue with it," said Tech. Sgt. Tabetha Coley, 509th Force Support Squadron Airmen Leadership School instructor.

For more information or help quitting, contact the Whiteman HAWC at 660-687-7662 or visit their Facebook page at www.facebook.com/WhitemanHAWC.
