How to be happily married to the military

By Keva Cochran
393rd Bomb Squadron spouse

Remember when you got engaged and people would give you all kinds of unsolicited advice? I remember my aunt telling me that when you marry a man, you don't just marry him ... you marry his whole family. No one ever tells you that when you marry a military man, you don't just marry the man ... you marry the military as well.

It's a huge challenge to have a happy marriage. It takes a lot of sacrifice and it's hard work. But when you marry an Airman, there's a third wheel in the marriage and that's the Air Force. At the beginning of my journey as a military spouse, there were times that I really resented that third wheel.

Over the course of the past seventeen years, that resentment gradually grew into acceptance and amazingly enough, now I can say that I really do love and appreciate the Air Force. Our marriage is stronger and happier-not despite the Air Force-but in many ways because of the Air Force and the challenges faced along the way. I'd like to share with you a few things that I have found that have helped our marriage during our Air Force journey.

First, be flexible. I'm sure many of you have had this experience: You've arranged to have a special meal for your family at 6 p.m. Your spouse had said he was planning on being home on time. The clock strikes 6 p.m., 6:30 p.m., 7:00 p.m. The food is now cold and you are really frustrated. Your spouse walks in the door more than an hour later and he explains that there was a situation at work that simply had to be dealt with before he could come home. I went through this frustrating scenario dozens of times during our first couple of years in the Air Force. I finally realized that my husband's job in the Air Force was never going to be a "nine-to-five" (or even a seven-to-six for that matter!). He just has to stay until the work gets done. I came to the realization that I needed to plan as if he probably wouldn't be home for dinner, and then if he did get home in time, it was a pleasant surprise! Most days he does make his family engagements on time; but remembering to be flexible has made me so much happier.

I am so grateful for this Air Force journey and how it has strengthened our marriage. As I've tried to be flexible, to build a strong support system, and to be positive on this journey, our marriage and family has become stronger and happier. Our children are building character and becoming more resilient and the Air Force has progressed from being a third wheel to being a special part of our family.

Second, be a friend. There will be times when you are "holding down the fort" while your spouse is deployed or on temporary duty (TDY). You need a support system to help you through those times. There are lots of places to meet good friends: your church, squadron functions, your community, spouse organizations, PTA, etc. A good friend of mine here at Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo., always says, "It's not the base that makes an assignment enjoyable, it's the people you meet and connect with that make the assignment." There will be times when you are in need of help and there will be times when your friends really need your help. I have found so much joy through opportunities to serve others in our Air Force family. When my spouse is TDY or deployed, he knows I will be okay because I have a healthy support system of good friends. This knowledge makes it much easier for him to leave our family and focus on his job while he is away.

Third, be positive. Another scenario: Your family has waited with anticipation for permanent change of station orders. Where will you go next? Germany? Hawaii? Florida? Your spouse comes home and ... drum roll please... he announces that your family will be headed to the frozen tundra of Keflavik, Iceland for the next three years.

This is not the dream assignment you had in mind!

I've learned that my children and my spouse are watching my reactions in moments like this, and they take their cues from me. If I try to put my best foot forward when preparing for a new location, then my family will follow suit. A positive attitude is huge when it comes to helping your family transition to a new base and community.

I am so grateful for this Air Force journey and how it has strengthened our marriage. As I've tried to be flexible, to build a strong support system, and to be positive on this journey, our marriage and family has become stronger and happier. Our children are building character and becoming more resilient and the Air Force has progressed from being a third wheel to being a special part of our family.

What is the social domain?

By Sandra Williams
Community Support Coordinator

There are four areas of a person's life which captures the totality of how they experience and relate to others and themselves. In order to be a balanced person, you must first have a balanced lifestyle. The mental, physical, social, and spiritual domains are the four areas that require constant vigilance.

The last quarter, we focused on the spiritual domain ... which is the ability to sustain an individual's sense of well-being and purpose through a set of spiritual beliefs, principles or values. This quarter we will be focusing on the social domain.

The social domain is our ability to engage in healthy social networks that promote overall well-being and optimal performance. What's that you say? You're not a "social" person? That's ok, most of us aren't. Being healthy socially doesn't mean having many intimate friends, a multitude of casual acquaintances; but it does mean being able to know how to make contact. That might be on social media, Twitter, Facebook or even video games that allow us to communicate.

The social domain forces us to realize that we aren't alone. The ability to communicate, feel connected, have social support and feel a sense of teamwork. If you know you have someone to turn too, it makes that day that just isn't going that great, that much easier to deal with.

We always have to make time to play and have fun and there are many avenues available to do just that. Getting involved in the community, group activities, etc., is just the tip of the social domain and there will be more to follow as the weeks go by.

This quarter we want to focus on increasing contacts and support from the important people in your life, which will include friends, family, co-workers, leaders and your wingmen.

Like coach Vince Lombardi said "It is not whether you get knocked down. It's whether you get up again..." I would like to add, "...it's better if we have someone who can help us get back up". That is the social domain.

A message from the Chief of Staff

Mark A. Welsh III
General, USAF Chief of Staff

April is Sexual Assault Awareness and Prevention Month for the Department of Defense. This year's theme is "Eliminate Sexual Assault. Know Your Part. Do Your Part."

Every Airman, at every level of our Air Force, has a unique role in preventing this crime and, when prevention fails, responding to it. Each of us has a responsibility to foster a culture of dignity and respect and actively work to eliminate behavior that doesn't value each and every person as critically important to our team. When we see such behavior, we have a moral obligation to identify it as unacceptable and ensure those displaying it understands we will not tolerate it. We also share the responsibility to act if we see inappropriate behavior unfolding. We do not tolerate sexual harassment and assault. They are completely contrary to our Core Values. Those who don't understand that need to find a new line of work.

In those terrible instances when a sexual assault does occur, we also share a commitment to care for the victim in every way possible: to provide them dedicated legal support, a thorough, timely investigation, the proper legal outcome, and whatever care they require. We must ensure they know we are there to help them, and do everything in our power to eliminate even the slightest hint of professional or personal retaliation of any type against them.

I ask that each of you dedicate yourself to this effort. There's only one acceptable goal and that's an Air Force free from sexual assault. We can't get there without you!

Take care of each other.

Former Army 'shirt' will drive family readiness in 131st, seeks volunteers

By Senior Airman Nathan Dampf

131st Bomb Wing Public Affairs

If an Airman is having issues managing his own finances, he has a resource to teach him how in the 131st Family Readiness Group. If a woman's husband is deployed and she doesn't know what to do when her car breaks down, she has a resource in the FRG. And, for the military spouse who is looking for something to do with the kids during a drill weekend, he can find answers at the FRG.

Single or married, with or without children, there are a myriad of resources available from the 131st FRG.

"It's my intent to create a robust family network program that will help prepare the families of the 131st Bomb Wing," said Gary Woods, the new 131st Bomb Wing Airman and Family Readiness Program manager, who comes to the position from U.S. Army Garrison Japan. "Supporting the National Guard is a bit more of a challenge. But, it's important to recognize those demographics and create programs that reach out to our Citizen Airmen across the state, and sometimes across state lines."

Woods, a former U.S. Army first sergeant, led more than 600 Soldiers during three different tours—two in Japan and one at Fort Gordon, Georgia. Reaching out to and helping service members is something that Woods was taught by one of his early mentors in the Army.

"I still remember Staff Sgt. Clark," Woods said. "He said, 'What I help you do, make sure you do for two or three other people.'"

Woods took that message to heart and helped much more than two or three. While at Fort Gordon, Georgia, he became the first sergeant for the 297th Military Intelligence Battalion. Then, after he moved to Japan, he was assigned as the U.S. Army Garrison Japan first sergeant at Camp Zama, Japan. That assignment morphed into a third tour as a first sergeant at Headquarters, Headquarters Company U.S. Army Japan/1st Corp Forward.

In those positions, Woods worked closely with company commanders and provided day-to-day guidance to the Soldiers in the unit. He emphasized genuinely caring for service members beyond the uniform. Now, Woods intends to use that experience to drive the 131st family readiness program here.

Family readiness programs in the Department of Defense are vital to the mission, and especially applicable to National Guardsmen who do not constantly live the military lifestyle. There are a variety of programs that family readiness professionals promote.

* They encourage overall unit morale by making sure Airmen and their families are coping well with military life. Or, they promote programs and resources available to families of deployed Airmen. Some program managers call regularly to the family of deployed Airmen to ensure the home front is safe or check-in just to say "hello" and the unit is here thinking of you.

* Family readiness managers also maintain unit retention by ensuring the members are taken care of throughout their time in service. Woods recalled how his wife, Renee, would attend baby showers so the Soldiers in his unit felt part of a team and would want to stay within that team.

* And lastly, program managers provide an understanding of—and access to—available government benefits or entitlement programs. They may hold classes on government insurance for deployed members, or programs on managing finances.

The success of the programs depends on volunteers, said Woods. As he energizes FRG programs at the wing, he is actively seeking volunteers from 131st Airmen and their families to participate or share their ideas to improve on what has been done in the past.

Ready to refer concerns to Woods are the 131st chaplains. As they walk around visiting with Citizen Airmen, the chaplains need to be ready to direct the Airmen or their dependents to the spiritual, medical or basic "functions of living" resources available here, said Lt. Col. Scott Doby, wing chaplain for the 131st Bomb Wing.

"We are fortunate in this wing to have people who are walking encyclopedias in their field," said Doby. "As a former first sergeant, without a shadow of a doubt, Mr. Woods understands the military culture and family culture. He'll be prepared to handle a variety of experiences in his new role."

In addition to the chaplain's office, Woods is also looking forward to working with other members of Team Whiteman to help Airmen and their families.

"The biggest thing I want to do is take advantage of our location and capitalize on Total Force Integration," he said of the Air National Guard's relationship with other active and reserve units at Whiteman. "I want to act with my counterparts in the 509th (Bomb Wing) and 442nd (Fighter Wing, Air Force Reserve). We need to build a network and establish relationships that will reach out to all of our Airmen and their dependents who need support."

For more information on volunteer opportunities with the 131st Family Readiness Group, contact Mr. Gary Woods at (660) 687-7972.
