B-2s conduct deployment to Indo-Asia-Pacific

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE, Neb. – Three B-2 Spirits deployed from Whiteman Air Force Base, Missouri, to the U.S. Pacific Command area of operations March 8.

While in the Indo-Asia-Pacific, the B-2s will integrate and conduct training with ally and partner air forces, and conduct a radio communications check with a U.S. air operations center.

This deployment will ensure bomber crews maintain a high state of readiness and crew proficiency, and will provide opportunities to integrate capabilities with key regional partners.

“These flights ensure we remain ready to deter strategic attack, now and into the future, and are one of the many ways the U.S. demonstrates its commitment to security and stability across the globe,” said Adm. Cecil D. Haney, U.S. Strategic Command commander. “Additionally, these efforts provide invaluable opportunities to build relationships and interoperability between the U.S. and ally and partner forces.”

“Strategic bomber deployments ensure our ability to project power at a time and place of our choosing and develop strong interoperability with our regional allies and partners,” said Gen. Lori J. Robinson, Pacific Air Forces commander. “Recent events demonstrate the continued need to provide consistent and credible air power throughout the Indo-Asia-Pacific region. Our ability to demonstrate credible combat power while training and interoperating with our network of like-minded partner nations is vitaly important.”

U.S. Strategic Command routinely demonstrates its capability to command, control and conduct global bomber missions, most recently by deploying B-52s into the U.S. European Command area of responsibility earlier this month.

U.S. Strategic Command bombers regularly rotate through the Indo-Asia-Pacific to conduct USPACOM-led air operations, providing leaders with deterrent options to maintain regional stability.

One of nine DoD unified combatant commands, USSTRATCOM has global strategic missions, assigned through the Unified Command Plan, which include strategic deterrence; space operations; cyberspace operations; joint electronic warfare; global strike; missile defense; intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance; combating weapons of mass destruction; and analysis and targeting.

Tashonna Brown, the 509th Bomb Wing (BW) command chief assistant, left, discusses enlisted performance reports with Senior Airman Linda Ramirez, a 509th BW commander support staff journeyman, at Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo., March 8, 2016. Brown and Ramirez are recognized for their contributions to Whiteman and the Air Force during Women's History Month.

In the United States, Women's History Month traces its beginnings back to the first International Women's Day, March 8, 1911. In February 1980, President Jimmy Carter issued a presidential proclamation declaring the week of March 8, 1980, as National Women's History Week. The proclamation stated, "From the first settlers who came to our shores, from the first American Indian families who befriended them, men and women have worked together to build this nation. Too often the women were unsung and sometimes their contributions went unnoticed. But, the achievements, leadership, courage, strength and love of the women who built America were as vital as that of the men whose names we know so well." In 1987, after being petitioned by the National Women's History Project, Congress passed Pub. L. 100-9 which designated the month of March 1987 as Women's History Month.

In support of Women's History Month, Team Whiteman will highlight and recognize women in our ranks for their contributions to the Whiteman mission and our national defense.

Rank and name: Senior Airman Linda Ramirez

Duty Title: Commander support staff (CSS) journeyman, 509th Bomb Wing (BW)

Hometown: Portland, Ore.

Years in the Air Force: Five total (two AF Reserve and three active duty)

What woman influences you?

"My mom because of how she can balance everything in the house—10 siblings (three boys, six girls), 23 grandchildren and herself. My father passed away five years ago, and seeing her motivation and dedication to not give up and keep trying, while maintaining a good relationship with all ten children is amazing. She is a strong woman and a big influence of why I, myself, never give up."

What are your thoughts about the history of women in the Air Force and moving forward?

"Personally, I feel women have made a huge impact in the Air Force and continue to prove we can take on new challenges and bring new ideas to help create a better Air Force."

What do you love about your job?

"As part of the CSS, I love helping others. I love to provide them with the best customer service. Whether I am completing administrative paperwork, setting up video teleconferences or weekly meetings for the BW staff, I am teaching myself something new and learning from those around me each day. It gives me that push to find the answer, stay motivated and take the initiative."

What are your goals?

"I would love to finish my bachelor's degree in Human Resources and become a military training instructor. Overall, I want to be successful and progress in the Air Force and become a chief master sergeant."

Rank and name: Staff Sgt. Tashonna Brown

Duty Title: Command chief assistant (CCA), 509th Bomb Wing (BW)

Hometown: Shreveport, La.

Years in the Air Force: 11 years

What woman influences you?

"My mom has always been a positive influence in my life and a role model. She has always been strong and able to adapt to the military lifestyle while my dad served in the military. No matter the time of the day, she is available to listen to me and give me advice. Women influences in the military are my previous female supervisors who have helped me throughout my career—being good mentors and role models."

What are your thoughts about the history of women in the Air Force and moving forward?

"Women's history in the military is important to me because it shows how women have overcome obstacles to help future women in the military. I believe if they can overcome and do it, then so can I."

What do you love about your job? "While filling the role of the CCA for the 509th BW, I love interacting with different agencies from the bomb wing. I also enjoy having a supervisor who is available for mentorship daily, not only for me but others also."

What are your goals?

"I would like to make a career out of the Air Force and retire."

U.S. Air Force Senior Airman Linda Ramirez, a 509th Bomb Wing commander support staff journeyman, speaks to Airmen during an Airman-to-Airman brief, at Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo., March 8, 2016. On PACE: Happiness breeds success

Bridging the Air Force Core Values with the mission

U.S. Air Force Chief Master Sgt. Anthony Fisher, the superintendent of Profession of Arms Center of Excellence (PACE), briefs enlisted leaders during PACE training at Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo., March 4, 2016. The training included tips on bridging the Air Force Core Values and its mission to accomplish a higher level of professionalism through trust, loyalty and commitment.

Trust, loyalty and commitment; these are the three enablers that connect the Air Force's core values to its mission.

On March 4, 2016, Chief Master Sgt. Anthony Fisher, the superintendent of the Profession of Arms Center of Excellence (PACE), visited Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo., to train enlisted leaders on how to achieve a higher level of professionalism and be the best leader possible.

A small group of base leadership participated in PACE training last year, but more than 40 members of the 509th Bomb Wing (BW) and 131st BW attended training during this visit at Whiteman.

About one year ago, the U.S. Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Mark A. Welsh III activated PACE to inspire a commitment to the Profession of Arms while promoting a healthy environment of trust to help Air Force leaders in their personal and professional lives.

Fisher spoke about the bridge between the Air Force core values of Integrity First, Service Before Self, Excellence In All We Do and the Air Force's mission to fly, fight and win.

"Healthy institutions stay true to their values while accomplishing the mission," said Fisher. "It is important that we never compromise values for the mission, and never compromise the mission for values."

The Air Force has four goals in order to ensure professionalism: inspire a strong commitment to the Profession of Arms, promote the right mindset to enhance effectiveness and trust, foster relationships that strengthen an environment of trust, and enhance a culture of shared identity, dignity and respect.

"We need to shape the environment so Airmen can flourish through mentorship," said Fisher. "Touch the people before you touch the work, because happiness breeds success."

Fisher stressed the importance of getting to know your Airmen and their goals. He also mentioned that every Airman is facing real-life situations, and it is important to recognize this as leaders.

"As leaders, our number one job is to bring out the best version of our people intellectually, physically and emotionally," said Chief Master Sgt. Mauree Powell, the 509th Mission Support Group superintendent. "We're always so busy in today's world. However, it's not going to fall apart right now if you take a few minutes for your Airmen. The biggest thing I learned is that as a leader, I can't put myself in a box. I need to listen to others' perspectives more."

Base leaders who attended the PACE training said they were thankful for the opportunity and thought it was beneficial.

"The PACE training helped me become more self-aware of my strengths and improve as a leader," said Chief Master Sgt. Shawn Drinkard, the 509th Bomb Wing command chief. "The training is great for anyone who has the opportunity to lead. In the end, we can all lead better."

Every member of the U.S. Air Force is entrusted with the responsibility to preserve national security and answer our nation's call at any moment. In order to maintain this trust, upholding values and professionalism is crucial. PACE provides strategies to leaders, thus supporting the Air Force core values and mission and enhancing the Profession of Arms.

Vive la liberté: B-52s join French forces for close air support exercise

A French Air Force Mirage 2000 holds station off the wing of a U.S. Air Force B-52 Stratofortress in the skies over Northern France, March 1, 2016. The B-52 participated in an ad hoc friendly intercept during its flight to Norway for NATO exercise Cold Response 16. Friendly intercepts like these are often used as a training opportunity for both parties, and improve the coordination between military units.

By Senior Airman Joseph Raatz
20th Expeditionary Bomb Squadron
Public Affairs

MORÓN AIR BASE, Spain -- U.S. Air Force B-52 Stratofortresses joined French aircraft and ground troops from a dozen nations to kick off a close air support exercise in the Mediterranean Monday, March 7.

Serpentex, an annual French-led exercise, involves joint-tactical air controllers from 12 partner countries. Operating on the French island of Corsica, these JTACs work together to practice properly identifying targets and using that data to call in air strikes from nearby French and American aircraft.

"Serpentex is a great opportunity to have all the JTACs from coalition nations in one place, training together to increase interoperability and work on communication skills," said Maj. Sarah Fortin, 20th Expeditionary Bomb Squadron assistant director of operations. "It gives them a chance to train and get smart on what they have to do and what their capabilities are, so later on down the road when it counts, they can perform effectively and efficiently."

Serpentex differs from other joint-military exercises in the region as it concentrates solely on close air support. This critical capability puts the power of precise, concentrated air strikes in the hands of troops on the ground, who can call these strikes in to defend themselves against enemy attacks or to eliminate vital targets with lethal accuracy.

This is the first year B-52s have been invited to participate in the exercise, as the role of CAS has traditionally been filled by various fighter platforms. The Stratofortress is well-suited for this application however, as it can loiter for extended periods and carries a wider range of munitions than any other aircraft in the U.S. inventory.

During the exercise, the B-52s will join with French fighters to support JTACs from several NATO nations as well as those from Jordan and Saudi Arabia, who are also participating this year. Training with a wide range of mission partners ensures a more comprehensive learning experience, Fortin explained.

"Working alongside our coalition partners out there will be a great experience for everybody," Fortin said. "Most of them haven't worked with bombers for these types of missions before. We have a longer duration and a lot wider turn radius than some of the fighters, so they're going to have to find a new pacing for calling us in for close air support. But I promise that bomber CAS is worth the wait."

The B-52s involved in Serpentex also participated in the Norwegian-led Cold Response 16, a large-scale NATO military training exercise in the Trøndelag region of Norway involving 16,000 troops and comprising air, ground and maritime operations. The bombers will be participating in both exercises simultaneously for a short time as Cold Response winds down. Temporarily stationing the aircraft in Europe allowed for more sorties, shorter flight times, less fuel burned and more training hours.

"The ability to train bomber aircrews in different geographic combatant commands is essential to maintaining a strong, credible bomber force that enhances the security and stability of our allies and partners," said Lt. Col. Dennis Cummings, 20th Expeditionary Bomb Squadron commander. "Our ability to smoothly and effectively conduct these multinational missions is heavily indebted to the hospitality of Spain and fantastic support we are receiving from U.S. Air Forces Europe."

FCC NEWS AND INFORMATION

FCC OFFICE 660-687-5590

Want a Profitable Home Based Career?

Providers are needed to provide care for the following: evenings, weekends, swing shift workers, infants, special needs and mildly-ill children. The Air Force offers a subsidy for providers for all children under the ages of 3 and any child who falls into the critical needs areas. Providers who hold a license are subsidized $160 a week per qualifying child. Providers with chronic health problems are accepted. Call for more details.

Extended Duty Care

Register now for the extended duty care program. It is available to help DoD parents meet child care requirements for extra duty during exercises and emergencies. Care is provided in a contracted, licensed family child care home to augment regular care arrangements and is FREE. Come to the FCC office for an application prior to participation. Reservations need to be made at least a week prior to the care date. Call for more details.
