Command Post Airman earns below-the-zone promotion

An Airman with the 509th Bomb Wing Command Post (CP) at Whiteman Air Force Base, Missouri, earned Senior Airman below-the-zone on Dec. 12, 2018.

Senior Airman below-the-zone, or BTZ, is a program that allows those with the rank of airmen to promote to senior airmen six months early. The program is in place for Airmen who are performing above their rank and gives approximately 15 percent of Airmen the early promotion.

CP members and leadership from the wing staff surprised Airman 1st Class Shantavia A. Webb with the announcement that she had been selected. After learning about her promotion, Webb said she was overwhelmed with happiness and was incredibly appreciative.

Senior Master Sgt. Dennis Caldwell Jr., the superintendent of Nuclear Command and Control Operations with the 509th BW CP, said Webb competed with four other Airmen from the unit.

Webb credited her leadership with playing a major role in her achieving BTZ. She said her supervisor pushed her professionally since her arrival at Whiteman AFB and had her keep a bullet tracker for her superintendent and supervisor to help them monitor her progress.

"She's a very hard worker, of course fairly new to the Air Force, she is a single mom of two boys and she's a shift worker and I never have any issues with worrying about if Airman Webb will make her shift," said Caldwell. "She's always an Airman I can depend on and I never have any issues with her, whether it's on duty or off. She's a great asset to the team."

Her package for BTZ highlighted her roles in CP and the mission.

"She decoded and validated 3,000 emergency action messages," said Caldwell. "She ensured the direct nuclear command and control for U.S. national security strategy, guaranteeing nuclear deterrence," Caldwell said.

Additionally, Caldwell said Webb performed exemplary command and control during an exercise.

After learning about her Webb is scheduled to be promoted to Senior Airman on Jan. 31, 2019.

"My mom and dad were the first people I wanted to call and tell because my mom had been tracking that I had been going up for this and she kept encouraging me and telling me I was gonna get it," Webb said.

"My family is very supportive, I also have a brother that lives here with me to help out with my children so he was like the third person I had to let know. But I definitely have a really good support system here and back home."

Webb has served in the Air Force for two years.

"I joined pretty much for a better life for myself and my children," said Webb. "I have two boys and I just wanted to be able to provide for them, give them stability. I just know the Air Force will take me far."

Webb's advice to her fellow Airmen:

"Work hard, make sure you keep track of your (professional) bullets, that is very important," she said. "Keep your supervisor in the loop, make sure that you're going above and beyond or you're doing things outside of work because you need to shine and know your job."

Webb emphasized the importance of persevering despite what other people might say.

"Don't let anyone discourage you, don't let anyone feed you negative energy or give you any kind of bad thoughts or think that you won't be able to get something because you can do something once you put your mind to it," Webb said.

KC Royals lead anti-bullying event

2nd Lt Michael Hardy
509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

The Kansas City Royals visited the Whiteman Air Force Base Youth Center to talk about bullying on Dec. 12, 2018.

The KC Royals and Sluggerrr, the team's lion baseball player mascot, showed the children how to recognize a bully and stand up and stop him or her.

Little introduction was needed for Sluggerrr as he entered the auditorium for his visit to the Whiteman Youth center. All 100 children, ages 5-15, screamed with excitement as he high-fived and danced with them.

Sluggerrr and the KC Royals representative, Tyler Banks, came to Whiteman AFB as part of their program Strike Out Bullying.

The children learned how bullying can come in different forms such as physical, verbal or cyber, and then discussed ways that a person can be bullied.

Banks shared messages from KC Royals players Ian Kennedy and Jacob Junis on a projector for the children.

The event was filled with audience interaction and participation.

Banks gave the children an important job while he was there to make sure that Sluggerrr wasn't being a bully. If he was, the children were to tell him.

Part of the program was about playing games to have fun, but also to challenge the children to use what they learned.

"This is really engaging for the children, gives good information that they can relate too," said Sarah Bierschbach, a staff member at the youth center.

Banks invited children in the auditorium to come up and play three different games.

The games included: stacking cups, wrapping staff in toilet paper and moving a Hula Hoop through a group of people.

Sluggerrr took this time to not share, knock things over, as well as to demonstrate other common bullying behaviors.

In one instance, Banks asked one of the children who Sluggerrr was bullying, how he felt after he had been bullied.

"It doesn't feel good," said the child.

Because of that, Banks asked the children a very important question.

"Can we make Whiteman a no-bully zone?" asked Banks.

"YES!" All the children and staff screamed in response.

As the event came to its close, Banks shared one final and important message:

"One of the most important things you can do is tell an adult," he said, while directing the children's attention to the Youth Center Staff.

His point was to show the children that these men and women are here to help them and want to help them. All they have to do is speak up.

"I think the Strike out Bullying program is great and it's good to come out and give a good visual. This program is good to not preach to children. Coming to the base is a unique opportunity and we have a ball," Banks said.

509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

Some children aspire to be scientists, engineers or fire fighters, but for brothers Brian and Ethan Rubio from Kansas City, Missouri, the dream has always been to become pilots.

Fortunately for them, with the help of Capt. Zachary Ziegler, a B-2 Instructor Pilot, assigned to the 393rd Bomb Squadron, they were able to get a small dose of what it's like to sit in the pilot's seat.

St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital in Kansas City contacted Zachary's wife Lily in regards to the Rubio family. She worked as the middleman between the hospital and the 393rd Bomb Squadron.

"Pilot for a Day is an opportunity for the 393rd Tigers and specifically the 509th Bomb Wing to sponsor a child who is suffering from an illness or in this case a gene deficiency, to welcome them on base and give them a one in a lifetime opportunity to see what the B-2 is like," said Ziegler.

Brian suffers from a gene deficiency that has left him with depression, anxiety and a sensory disorder.

Batman and Robin

His brother Ethan, his mother Penny and his grandparents joined him on a Batman-themed tour of what it's like to be a B-2 pilot here at Whiteman Air Force base.

"Yesterday, it started with a pizza party where we brought all the tiger pilots and their families together and we had a naming where we named Brian "Batman" and Ethan "Robin" and we had a good time welcoming them to the squadron," said Ziegler. "They got their own flight suits, their own patches and they were named by our commander and learned about call signs."

With their new call signs, both Batman and his sidekick Robin woke up the following morning and met with Ziegler again at the Truman House where they ate breakfast together and would continue on with the rest of their tour.

Ziegler and the Rubio family started their tour at aircrew flight equipment where they were given the opportunity to try on a B-2 pilot's helmet and harness and night vision goggles.

Flying

After visiting air-crew flight equipment Ziegler and the Rubio family made their way to the 13th Bomb Squadron where they would receive a Batman inspired intelligence report on "Operation Arkham Spirit" and also get a chance to fly in the B-2 simulator.

"They talked about the threat of Joker and how he was taking over Gotham City, so then we got in the B-2 simulator where we flew over Las Vegas a.k.a., "Gotham City," and bombed Joker and his bad men and retook Gotham City," said Ziegler.

After their time in the simulator, both Brian and Ethan received a post-mission report and then met with Brig. Gen. John J. Nichols, commander of the 509th Bomb Wing, for lunch at the Mission's End, where both brothers shared their experiences defending Gotham City.

Shortly after lunch, the Rubio family went to the base's fire department where they learned what it's like to be a firefighter and a part of the explosive ordnance disposal team here at Whiteman.

"They showed Brian and Ethan the fire truck, of course, where they let them shoot water out of the turret and, one of my personal favorites, they showed them the robot that EOD uses to take care of the bombs," said Ziegler.

Before Brian and Ethan left the fire station, they made sure to thank all of the Airman with a high-fives and then made their way over to the B-2 dock where they were welcomed with a special surprise.

"The maintainers actually went through the effort to put Brian and Ethan's names on the nose gear of the aircraft with Batman and Robin as their call signs," said Ziegler.

After seeing the B-2 up close, Ziegler decided to take the Rubio family on a last-minute stop up one of the air traffic control towers, so that the family could get a bird's-eye view of the B-2 taking off.

Whiteman Family

The trip wrapped up with Ziegler escorting the Rubio family back to their hotel where they made their final goodbyes.

The Pilot for a Day program focuses on providing a child suffering with an illness the opportunity to tour Whiteman Air Force Base and see what it's like to be a B-2 Spirit Stealth Bomber pilot.

Reaching out from the darkness

Airman overcomes thoughts of suicide, finds strength in friends, family and service

Senior Airman Kristin Cerri
509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

"Everyone will just move on. They always do. The world will keep spinning and they'll remember me, but they'll move on," were the thoughts running through Senior Airman Sean Dunn's head as sat contemplating taking his own life.

The darkest parts of Dunn's young life began in 2014 during his time as a trainee at U.S. Air Force Basic Military Training. He received a call from his new bride on New Year's Day. She told Dunn she no longer wanted to be married to him and was filing for separation.

"I didn't know how to process any of that," Dunn said. "I was in shock."

According to the National Institute of Mental Health, responses that proceed a traumatic emotional event can include: feelings of anxiety or anger, difficulty sleeping or concentrating, and persistent thoughts of the event that occurred.

Thankfully, with the help of a chaplain and his military training instructors, Dunn was able to push through the devastating news and graduate BMT. He decided to focus on his career in the Air Force.

When he first arrived at Whiteman Air Force Base, Missouri, he enjoyed his job as nuclear weapons specialist assigned to the 509th Munitions Squadron.

Coming home to an empty apartment every night, on the other hand, was something he dreaded.

"On the outside looking in, no one knew it because work was the time when I felt like myself, where I felt that sense of purpose," Dunn recalled. "And I'd go home and it felt like I had nothing."

Dunn's suicidal thoughts began as fleeting ideations, but over time grew in frequency and intensity, he said.

"I would kind of make light of suicide. The more I did that, the more I started to rationalize it," Dunn said. "I kept it to myself and I bottled everything up. One day I was at home and I had decided that I can't deal with the pain anymore."

One myth about suicide is that most happen suddenly without warning. According to the National Alliance of Mental Illness, most suicides occur after an individual has displayed verbal or behavioral warning signs rather than in the heat of the moment.

The thought that potentially saved his life was that of the devastation it would bring to his younger brother.

"I realized that if I were to do that, I would leave him behind permanently and that damage that would be done to him would never go away," Dunn said, as his eyes filled with tears. "I told myself from that point on, no matter what I go through I'm never going to get this low again, and even if I do, I'm going to reach out."

Four and a half year since that low time in his life,

Dunn said that people close to him helped in his recovery.

"I had two really good friends who would take the time to stop in and check on me randomly," Dunn said. "That made me feel like there are people who cared."

These two friends are also responsible for introducing Dunn to his current wife who works as a nurse in the local area. The two are actually from the same hometown in North Carolina – a bond, Dunn said, that makes him feel less alone.

Today, he said, he realizes he should have reached out to others sooner.

"I don't think I would've ever gotten as far as I did (help)," he said. "I'm fortunate I had a thought to hold onto because if I didn't have the thought of what would happen to my brother, who knows what would have happened. I potentially wouldn't be here today. If I had just reached out earlier it would've never gotten to that point."

Looking ahead, Dunn said he hopes to become a U.S. Air Force chaplain to help others through their time of need.

Until then, he has a message for his fellow Airmen.

"Don't be afraid to reach out to people around you beyond the questions that we are trained to ask at work," Dunn said.

With the holidays approaching, Dunn suggests checking in on people at home because that's when they need it. That's when they feel the most alone.

Exercise Talon Fury is a joint, group-level exercise that took place from Dec. 6, 2018, at Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo. It focused on training Tactical Air Control Party (TACP) Airmen to work together with the B-2 Spirit Stealth Bomber.

Every morning started with a pre-mission brief for the TACP Airmen.

After the brief, they geared up and flew out on UH-60 Black Hawks to various locations around Missouri. Once on the ground, TACP Airmen assessed the situation and called in air strikes for the B-2.

Svitak bicycle benefit at Whiteman AFB

Garrett Litherland, a Greenwood Laboratory School student, assembles bikes purchased by the Svitak Bicycle Benefit at a local bicycle shop in 2017. Litherland manages the annual collection of built and donated bikes for children throughout Missouri. The benefit is named after fallen Army Sgt. Phil Svitak, who died in 2002 while serving with the 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment in Afghanistan. (Courtesy photo)

On Dec. 17, 2018, several members of Team Whiteman assisted in unloading and organizing 40 bicycles for children this Christmas as part of the Svitak Bicycle Benefit Drop Off.

The benefit is named after Army Sgt. Phil Svitak who died in 2002 while serving with the 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment in Afghanistan. He was an avid cyclist and father of two boys.

David Litherland began the benefit program and made it Svitak's namesake after seeing a news article about his death in the newspaper. Svitak's mother gave permission for Litherland to do so.

"In the spirit of continuing her son's name and legacy, it's a great way to give back to the base," said First Sgt. Michael Carbajal, assigned to the 509th Bomb Wing, who is an avid biker.

Due to family and scheduling demands, the program took a few-year hiatus.

Last year, Litherland's son Garrett took charge brought the program back to life.

As a child, Garrett remembered sitting in a bike shop after hours helping assemble bikes. He ate pizza and wore an elf hat. It was those memories that inspired him to bring the Svitak Bicycle Benefit back.

First Sgt. Michael Carbajal, assigned to the 509th Bomb Wing, unloads a bicycle on Dec. 17, 2018, at Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo. Carbajal and other members of Team Whiteman participated in the Svitak Bicycle Benefit drop off, named after fallen service member Army Sgt. Phil Svitak from Joplin, Missouri, who was an avid cyclist. (U.S. Air Force photo by 2nd Lt. Michael Hardy)

"What was missing from the holiday for me was the joy of being of service to others and showing appreciation by helping to provide gifts for the children of our military," said Garrett Litherland about his decision to revive the Svitak Bicycle Benefit.

The Svitak Bicycle Benefit is responsible for collecting more than $400,000 worth of built or donated bicycles.

Garrett raises funds through the website GoFundMe and purchases the bikes to be donated. Garrett's friends and classmates at nearby Greenwood Laboratory School help assemble the bikes.

Local businesses such as A&B Bicycles and Cycle Unlimited in Springfield, Missouri also give Garrett a discount in their stores.

When a child is riding a bicycle around Whiteman AFB, it is possible that it is one of the bikes donated by Garrett and the Svitak Bicycle Benefit.
